Co-production and Third Sector Social Services in Europe: Some Concepts and Evidence

Victor Pestoff. International Journal of Voluntary and Nonprofit Organizations (Voluntas), volume 23, issue 4, pages 1102-1118, October 2012.

<http://www.springerlink.com/content/eg66283842722406/>

Abstract excerpted from the URL cited above: "The third sector is poised to play a leading role in public sector innovations in the twenty-first century. The third sector can enhance, facilitate, and promote greater citizen participation in the determination, provision, and governance of social services through co-production. This article explores some crucial conceptual issues related to the co-production of public services and the role of the third sector. It also provides some brief empirical evidence of the potential of the third sector, not merely as a service provider, but also as a facilitator of the re-democratization of the European welfare state. Here, collective action and third sector provision are crucial for distinguishing between co-production heavy and light. The conclusion focuses on the ability of the public, third, and for-profit sectors to embrace greater citizen participation and co-production."

MODES DE DÉVELOPPEMENT ET DE FINANCEMENT

Modes of development and financing / Modos de desarrollo y de financiamiento

Understanding the rural third sector: insights from Veblen and Bogdanov

Valentinov Vladislav. Kybernetes: The International Journal of Systems & Cybernetics, volume 41, issues 1-2, pages 177-188, 2012.

<http://www.ingentaconnect.com/content/mcb/067/2012/00000041/F0020001/art00012>

Abstract excerpted from the URL cited above: “Despite the worldwide importance of third sector organizations in rural areas, the theoretical connection between the third sector and rural development remains largely unexplored. The purpose of this paper is to develop a theoretical explanation of why and how third sector organizations contribute to rural development. The paper builds upon the institutional economics of Thorstein Veblen and the tektology of Alexander Bogdanov. Tektology is used as an instrument to bring Veblenian criticism of pecuniary culture to bear on the explanation of the rural third sector. Based on the tektological law of systems divergence, the Veblenian pecuniary-industrial dichotomy and rural-urban disparities are shown to be interrelated evolutionary consequences of pecuniary culture. Third sector organizations' contribution to rural development is explained in terms of the tektological notion of counter-differentiation. Applied to pecuniary culture, counter-differentiation involves attenuating its basic ingredients, such as private ownership and pecuniary motivation. This is achieved through third sector organizations' characteristics such as profit appropriation constraint and nonpecuniary goal orientation, respectively. The paper identifies the institutional economics implications of the general systems theory and utilizes these implications to inform the research on the internationally relevant problem of rural development.”

Co-operation as a Remedy in Times of Crisis Agricultural Co-Operatives in the World Their Roles for Rural Development and Poverty Reduction

Hans-Hermann Münkner. Euricse Working Paper, issue 41/ 12, September 2012.

http://papers.ssrn.com/sol3/papers.cfm?abstract\_id=2145317

Abstract excerpted from the URL cited above: “The author of this publication traces the origins of the relatively bad image which co-operative societies are having even today among most international and bi-lateral technical assistance and donor organisations. From 1975, when the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development (UNRISD) issued the verdict that co-operatives are unsuitable to serve as agents of change, because they are either small, inefficient and insignificant or – when economically successful – they are serving the better-off, reinforce existing social hierarchies and fail to reduce poverty. The author tries to lift the ideological fog usually covering this topic by starting from clearly defined terms when analysing the roles, agricultural co-operatives can play, their potentials, limitations and preconditions to succeed in reducing poverty. It is shown by quoting directly from relevant documents of the United Nations, World Bank, FAO and ILO, how registered state-controlled pseudo-co-operatives depending on external support were erroneously taken to be co-operative societies and have tarnished the image of genuine co-operative self-help. After defining what genuine co-operatives are, and the difference between co-operatives for the poor, of the poor and open to the poor, it is discussed how a re-orientation of development policy could improve the chances of genuine co-operatives to allow people with limited means to work themselves out of poverty by co-operating.”

ÉVALUATION

Evaluation methods / Métodos de evaluación

Associational Performance: The Influence of Cohesion, Decision-Making and the Environment

Jorge Cadena-Roa, Matilde Luna and Cristina Puga. International Journal of Voluntary and Nonprofit Organizations (Voluntas), volume 23, issue 4, pages 993-1013, October 2012.

<http://www.springerlink.com/content/23064p48653u0274/>

Abstract excerpted from the URL cited above: “The importance of associations in contemporary democratic societies is out of the question. Still, there is a need for a new approach that considers them as a specific and singular organization type, different from business firms and government agencies. There is also a need to evaluate their performance. Based on case studies and diverse theoretical insights, this article lays out some criteria for assessing the effects on associational performance of cohesion, decision-making and relation to environment.”

Social Capital, Governance and Performance of Ethiopian Coffee Cooperatives

Ruerd Rubenand and Jorge Heras. Annals of Public and Cooperative Economics, volume 83, issue 4, pages 463–484, December 2012.

<http://onlinelibrary.wiley.com/doi/10.1111/j.1467-8292.2012.00473.x/abstract>

Abstract excerpted from the URL cited above: “The performance of agrarian cooperatives strongly depends on the interaction between internal cohesion and external exchange. Empirical assessments of social capital and trust within cooperatives suggest that market involvement could enhance collective action. This relationship may not hold, however, under circumstances of heterogeneous membership and strong state control. We use field data from a comparative sample of 500 coffee farmers belonging to five cooperatives of Sidama Cooperative Union, Ethiopia to outline how differences in economic performance are related to the structure of social networks. We identify clear trade-offs between bonding and bridging social capital that favour remotely located cooperatives.”

GESTION

Management / Gestión

Undeclared Work in Non-Profit Sports Clubs: A Mixed Method Approach for Assessing the Size and Motives

Steven Vos; Diane Breesch and Jeroen Scheerder. International Journal of Voluntary and Nonprofit Organizations (VOLUNTAS), volume 23, issue 4, October 2012.

<http://www.springerlink.com/content/a742418568682qj2/fulltext.html>

Abstract excerpted from the URL cited above: “Non-market economy including volunteer work is often ignored in estimations of the shadow economy because no money changes hands. Whilst volunteers stricto sensu are not paid for their activities, a tendency is noted that legal frameworks do allow for reimbursement for actual expenses incurred. However, if the latter receive reimbursements beyond the scope of regulations and labour law this can also be regarded as undeclared work. In this article, the size and motives of this type of undeclared work in non-profit sports clubs in Flanders (Belgium) are explored. As this kind of informal work, by its nature, is difficult to measure, a mixed method approach was used. The results show that at least 10% of volunteers can be considered as undeclared workers. The tax and social security contribution burdens are considered as the main causes for this undeclared work. It is argued that a new employment status for paid volunteers in sports is necessary to guarantee the provision of qualitative sports services.”

The managerial transformation of Italian co-operative enterprises 1946-2010

Patrizia Battilani and Vera Zamagni. Business History, volume 54, issue 6, pages 964-985, October 2012.

<http://www.ingentaconnect.com/content/routledg/bh/2012/00000054/00000006/art00008>

Abstract excerpted from the URL cited above: “The Italian co-operative enterprises have prospered in the last 30 years in various sectors. In this essay we analyse the role played by managerialisation in allowing Italian co-ops to compete nationally and internationally with capitalist enterprises. On the basis of a substantial set of company histories and managers interviews, we have built a three generations model of co-ops managers, which shows the changes that have allowed co-ops to become fully equipped with managerial skills. The strong leadership of umbrella organisations, the inner careers of most managers and legislation have been instrumental in avoiding demutualisation, the killer of co-ops in many other countries.”

Do Cooperative Enterprises Create Social Trust?

Fabio Sabatini, Francesca Modena and Ermanno C. Tortia. Euricse Working Paper No. 043 | 12, October 2012.

http://papers.ssrn.com/sol3/papers.cfm?abstract\_id=2155778

Abstract excerpted from the URL cited above: "This paper contributes to the literature by carrying out the first empirical investigation into the role of different types of enterprises in the creation of social trust. Drawing on a unique dataset collected through the administration of a questionnaire to a representative sample of the population of the Italian Province of Trento in March 2011, we find that cooperatives are the only type of enterprise where the work environment fosters the social trust of workers."

Regroupements et coopération associatives: aspects juridiques et fiscaux

<http://www.recma.org/node/2518>

Résumé issu de l'URL ci-haut: « Une création d'association sur cinq serait aujourd'hui le résultat d'une restructuration. Restructuration, un mot qui habituellement fait peur, souvent synonyme de compression du personnel salarié ou de changements profonds dans les modes de gestion. Qu'en est-il du secteur associatif ? Dans un contexte de plus en plus concurrentiel, les associations seraient-elles, elles aussi, gagnées par cette fièvre de la rentabilité « à tout prix » ? Existe-t-il, pour ces structures, un seuil critique en dessous duquel leur pérennité ne serait plus assurée ? Nous tenterons d'identifier les principales raisons qui poussent les associations à se rapprocher, avant de présenter les différents modes de coopération et de regroupement envisageables, ainsi que les contraintes existantes sur le plan juridique et fiscal. »

Advancing the Theory of the Cooperative Organization: The Cooperative as a True Hybrid

Fabio Chaddad. Annals of Public and Cooperative Economics, volume 83, issue 4, pages 445–461, December 2012.

<http://onlinelibrary.wiley.com/doi/10.1111/j.1467-8292.2012.00472.x/abstract>

Abstract excerpted from the URL cited above: « What is a cooperative? Is it a form of vertical integration, an independent organization or an intermediate form of governance between the market and the hierarchy? This paper contributes to the economic theory of the cooperative organization by examining it from a comparative economic perspective. Departing from Williamson's one-dimensional continuum of governance structures, the paper adopts the view that governance structures exhibit multiple dimensions and true hybrids are market-like on some of these dimensions while hierarchy-like on others. I show that the cooperative blends market-like attributes with hierarchy-like mechanisms and thus should be viewed as a true hybrid rather than as an intermediate form. The paper concludes with a discussion about the usefulness of this approach and potential avenues for future research. »

Social Innovation and Social Enterprise in the Classroom: Frances Westley on Bringing Clarity and Rigor to Program Design

Mark, J. Weber. Academy of Management Learning and Education, volume 11, issue 3, pages 409-418, September 2012.

<http://amle.aom.org/content/11/3/409.abstract>

Abstract excerpted from the URL cited above: "With articles on organizational learning, the middle manager, and leadership appearing in Organization Science and SMJ alongside coauthors such as Henry Mintzberg and Karl Weick, and with over 2,500 citations on the first page of a Google Scholar search of her name, Frances Westley's vita has all the trappings of a traditional, accomplished management scholar. However, her CV is also replete with publications in journals such as Ecosystems and Ecology and Society, and peppered with a best-seller for social innovators (Getting to Maybe) and awards for which most business school scholars would not be considered ("The Ulysses S. Seal Award for Innovation in Conservation"). She has trained scientists engaged in saving endangered species, directed a ground-breaking Master's program for nonprofit leaders, led an environmental research institute, and spent the last decade thinking, writing, and teaching about social innovation and social enterprise. Frances holds the J.W. McConnell Chair in Social Innovation at the University of Waterloo where she also leads the Waterloo Institute for Social Innovation and Resilience (WISIR) and is the lead designer of the new Graduate Diploma in Social Innovation. This interview explores the distinctions and considerations Westley thinks scholars must weigh when designing curricula to advance the cause of social innovation.”

Social Innovation and Deliberative Democracy

Jennifer Eschweiler and Lars Hulgård. EMES Working Paper, issue 12/04, October 2012.

http://www.emes.net/fileadmin/emes/PDF\_files/Working\_Papers/WP\_12-04\_Eschweiler\_Hulgard.pdf

Abstract excerpted from the URL cited above: “The aim of this paper is to develop a conceptual framework that takes both process and outcome of social enterprises into account, with a particular focus on the internal and external dimensions of participation and governance. Such a distinction seems particularly important to flesh out the interdependence of social innovation and the structures it is embedded in. Innovation and learning processes in both an innovating organisation and its environment must be compatible at least to some extent to achieve an outcome that both satisfies needs and lives up to claims of legitimacy.”

Social Innovation, Local Governance and Social Quality: The Case of Intersectoral Collaboration in Hangzhou City

Li Yong, Sun Ying and Lin Ka. International Journal of Social Quality, volume 2, issue 1, pages 56-73, Summer 2012.

<http://www.ingentaconnect.com/content/berghahn/ijsq/2012/00000002/00000001/art00005>

Abstract excerpted from the URL cited above: “In contemporary European policy discussion, “innovation” is a term popularly used for finding responses to the pressure of global competition. In various forms of innovation, the accent is mainly given to technical and business innovation but less to social innovation. This article studies the issue of social innovation with reference to the local practice in Hangzhou city, which aims to strengthen the life quality of citizens in this city. These practices develop various forms of inter-sectoral collaboration, resulting in numerous “common denominator subject” (CDS) groups that are promoted by the local government. These practices follow the principles of cooperation and partnership, and thus develop a corporatist mechanism for urban development. Through discussion of these practices this article explores the nature and the features of these CDS groups, and evaluates its meaning for social innovation, local administration, life quality and social quality.”

Co-operation and the 'new consumerism' in interwar England

Peter J. Gurney. Business History, volume 54, issue 6, pages 905-924, October 2012.

<http://www.ingentaconnect.com/content/routledg/bh/2012/00000054/00000006/art00005>

Abstract excerpted from the URL cited above: “Economic historians have recently taught us a great deal about the ‘new consumerism’ in interwar Britain. However, the story has largely been told from the supply side and the Co-operative movement that played a key role in the lives of millions of working-class consumers has tended to be marginalised. This article brings the movement and the consumer centre stage. First, the uneven and vulnerable situation of the Co-op as a business is outlined. The next section briefly sketches economic and political attacks on the movement that made it more difficult to respond effectively to the challenges it faced. The major part of the article discusses oral evidence from ordinary co-operative members, which helps illuminate the contradictory pressures faced by consumers in this period.”

Social Learning and Social Entrepreneurship Education

Carole Howorth, Susan M. Smith and Caroline Parkinson. Academy of Management Learning and Education, volume 11, issue 3, pages 371- 389, September 2012.

<http://amle.aom.org/content/11/3/371.abstract>

Abstract excerpted from the URL cited above: “The complexities and uncertainties of social entrepreneurs’ worlds require them to juggle social and business aims. Using social theories of learning, we provide a deeper understanding of learning within social entrepreneurship education. Programs aimed to develop reflective thinking and communities of practice to equip social entrepreneurs for their unique circumstances. Two programs are compared and the implications of social and commercial entrepreneurs learning together are examined. Challenges and successes in the cultivation of a community of practice reveal the importance of learner identity and psychological safety. The paper culminates with key principles for educators of social entrepreneurs.”

La transition écologique de l'économie : La contribution des coopératives et de l'économie solidaire (Livre)

<http://www.puq.ca/catalogue/livres/transition-ecologique-economie-17578.html>

Résumé issu de l'URL ci-haut: « Développer une économie verte au-delà du capitalisme vert, est-ce pensable ? C'est non seulement pensable, mais des initiatives se manifestent par milliers un peu partout sur la planète. De plus en plus de mouvements prennent acte de l'urgence écologique au Québec et ailleurs dans le monde : gaz de schiste ici, biodiversité menacée là, réchauffement climatique de plus en plus menaçant... La recherche de solutions non capitalistes à ces problèmes se fait active, et des pratiques, des stratégies, des politiques de transition écologique de l'économie émergent. Car, contrairement à ce que l'habitude nous empêche d'envisager, l'économie peut être au service de la société. Pour ce faire, des mouvements, des communautés et des régions doivent s'engager directement sur le terrain de l'économie tout en négociant avec leur État pour qu'il favorise des politiques publiques conséquentes. Louis Favreau et Mario Hébert, se nourrissant des réflexions émises à l'occasion du Forum international des dirigeants de l'économie sociale et solidaire (FIDESS) et par les organisations québécoises qui en sont membres, présentent des analyses, mais également des propositions pour agir dès maintenant en matière de conversion écologique de l'économie. Ils rendent également compte des plus récentes recherches sur ce thème. Leur livre intéressera tout autant les militants, les dirigeants et les professionnels des mouvements sociaux que les chercheurs et les enseignants en organisation communautaire, en développement régional et, plus généralement, en sciences de l'environnement de même qu'en sciences économiques et sociales. »

L'actionnariat salarial : une voie d'avenir?

Marcel Hipszman. Revue Internationale de l'Économie Sociale (RECMA), numéro 326, Octobre 2012.

<http://www.recma.org/node/2525>

Résumé issu de l'URL ci-haut: « Le 4 juillet dernier sortait, à l'occasion du 1er Sommet de l'actionnariat salarial (1), un rapport qui fera date, établi par un expert indépendant, Graeme Nuttall, du cabinet de consultants Field Fisher Waterhouse. Commandité par le vice-Premier ministre britannique, Nick Clegg, ce rapport passe en revue les solutions adoptées au Royaume-Uni, où le secteur encore modeste, mais en croissance, comprend quelque 250 entreprises, avec 110 000 salariés et un chiffre d'affaires cumulé de 30 milliards d'euros. Il propose un ensemble de mesures destinées à permettre un développement beaucoup plus important de ce type d'entreprise, avec notamment la création d'un organisme-centre de ressources chargé de la promotion du concept. On pourrait tenter de le résumer en disant qu'avec un pragmatisme tout anglo-saxon, Graeme Nuttall considère qu'il ne s'agit pas de construire un dispositif entièrement nouveau, mais de faire l'inventaire de l'existant, d'utiliser les solutions adoptées, d'identifier les obstacles et d'apporter les améliorations et les innovations nécessaires. Les entreprises qui souhaitent s'engager dans cette voie disposeront ainsi d'une véritable boîte à outils. Cet événement témoigne de l'importance accordée, au Royaume-Uni, à l'actionnariat salarial, que Nick Clegg veut intégrer pleinement dans le tissu économique de la Grande-Bretagne. »

Aide à domicile et services à la personne : les associations dans la tourmente (Livre)

Francesca Petrella (dir). Presses universitaires de Rennes, collection Économie et société, 182 pages, 2012.

<http://www.pur-editions.fr/detail.php?idOuv=2869#>

Résumé issu de l'URL ci-haut: « Cet ouvrage analyse les stratégies et les pratiques des associations d'aide à domicile face à la multiplication des politiques publiques et à la structuration d'un marché des services à la personne. En s'appuyant sur différentes analyses historiques et empiriques, enquêtes de terrain, études de cas, les auteurs étudient la diversification des pratiques et des stratégies déployées. Ce faisant, ils interrogent l'unicité d'un « modèle » associatif ainsi que sa pérennité. »

Créateurs d'utopies: démocratie, autogestion, économie sociale et solidaire (Livre)

<http://www.yvesmichel.org/webmaster/espace-societe/createurs-dutopies-democratie-autogestion-economie-sociale-et-solidaire>

Résumé issu de l'URL ci-haut: « Le sujet initial de l'ouvrage était l'autogestion en France. Devant le constat actuel d'absence presque complète du mot, mais de l'existence de pratiques, la démarche a évolué : « La méthodologie qui a semblé la plus appropriée est celle de l'enquête auprès de personnes dont la vie militante et (ou) professionnelle ferait référence à des pratiques collectives non hiérarchisées et à l'autonomie, c'est-à-dire aux bases mêmes de l'autogestion. » D'où l'évolution du titre de l'ouvrage, l'autogestion étant reléguée dans le sous-titre, avec les notions de démocratie et d'économie sociale et solidaire. Mais le contenu est là, et il est passionnant. »

The Effectiveness of Social Business Plan Competitions in Developing Social and Civic Awareness and Participation

Caleb C. Y. Kwong; Piers Thompson and Cherry W. M. Cheung. Academy of Management Learning and Education, volume 11, issue 3, pages 324-348, September 2012.

<http://amle.aom.org/content/11/3/324.abstract>

Abstract excerpted from the URL cited above: "More and more universities are now delivering courses and programs to develop social awareness, but the literature on the effectiveness of these courses is currently very limited. With the introduction of "social entrepreneurship" as a new discipline within the wider ethics and social education banner, this pedagogic study explores the effectiveness of social business plan teaching in inducing social and civic awareness and intentionality among business school students. This is compared with the case study approach that is traditionally used within the classroom environment. Our study found that both approaches can be successful in raising awareness and improving the attitudes of participating students, increasing the probability that they will support socially oriented initiatives immediately or in the future. Interestingly, many students who participated in SBP teaching develop a local awareness of social and civic matters, while many of those who participated in case study learning develop a wider national and international perspective. In addition, it is found that many of those who participated in SBP development develop a deeper managerial and technical understanding of managing organizations within the social economy."
